SPORTSMANSHIP

The fundamentals of sportsmanship are a very important matter. It is not a subject to be overlooked in any type of sport. The sportsmanship of a player is a very good way of showing the people of your community and of other communities what kind of a person you really are. Everyone should know that it is not whether you win or lose, but how you play the game.

There are many important things to remember in participating in any kind of sport. One important thing to remember is, to be agreeable with the decision of the referee, or the umpire. His decision should be accepted by everyone.

One main thing to remember in any sport is to get along with the other players on the team. It takes the co-operation of each individual player to make a good team. Teamwork is the backbone of good sportsmanship. One should never "lose his head" in sports. When one's temper gets away from him, he is no good to the coach or to the rest of the team. A good player has good control over his temper. Also, do not criticise someone if they make a mistake. Remember, no one is perfect. This is a good rule to remember in sportsmanship, "No one is perfect!"
